HOW TO SHOOT AN AIRSHIP OR AEROPLANE.

The advent of the aeroplane and the airship has introduced a hard problem for the riflemen whose duty it is to bring down hostile craft of this kind. Even with its enormous speed the bullet discharged by a modern rifle is not fast enough for the aeroplane, as has been discovered in the European war, but the expert riflemen who are constantly on the watch for hostile air craft are fast learning the requirements for hitting these swiftly moving targets. He no longer aims at an aeroplane when trying to bring it down, but at a point about six lengths ahead of the machine. The airman running the hostile craft also knows this and, when under fire, seldom flies far in a straight line if he can help it, but follows a zigzag course. The Zeppelin is a much slower-moving craft and can be "plugged" about the center of the envelope if the riflemen aims at its nose. From the February Popular Mechanics Magazine.
